

CLAIMS

- 1- Electronic device or matrix integrated into a reception system for digital television networks (satellite, ground or cable) characterized because the MPEG (Motion Picture Expert Group) data flows are managed by a central processor and a common interface controller so that the data from various sources (MPEG data transport streams) can be routed intelligently and indistinctly to one or more reception devices, with said data flow being redirected through common interface modules that may act as filters, transformers or regenerators of the data.